International Enquirer

Making light of current affairs. This month: The Vines' Craig Nicholls

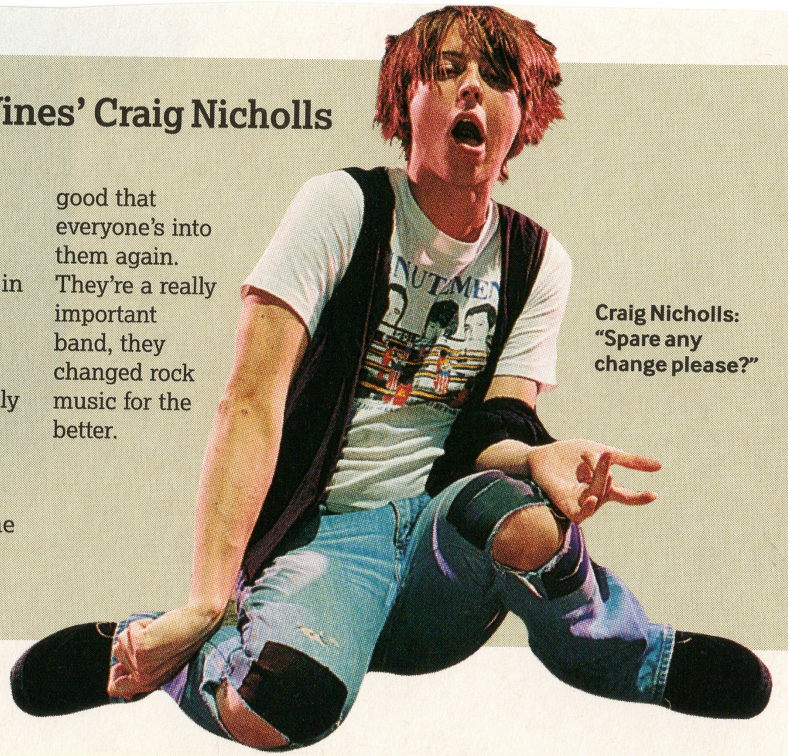
How was going back to Australia?
It was great, we saw our friends, who we hadn't seen for a long time. We haven't been back all year and I wish I could spend more time in Australia. A few people were saying we were an English band pretending to be Australian, but we didn't think too much about it, it was just a good time for us.

How do you feel about Blur without Graham Coxon?
I don't know where his head's at or what he wants to do with music so I don't want to tell him he's wrong, but I wish he'd stayed. I love Blur so much.

Can England win the Ashes?
Yes they can! I watched cricket on the TV one time and I think it can happen. England have got some good players and if they can put some points on the board they can come up with a win. To be honest, though, cricket's not that popular in Australia. Well, not everyone plays it.

What's with all your home-made T-shirts?
I want to see if I can be a T-shirt designer one day, that's why I'm in the band, I'm just testing it out. I've seen what it's like from the band perspective, so when I quit to design T-shirts I'll know exactly what bands want [laughs].

Do you like the new Nirvana track You Know You're Right?
It's amazing. They played it on the radio in Australia and instantly I thought it was a great song. It's good that everyone's into them again. They're a really important band, they changed rock music for the better.



Craig Nicholls: "Spare any change please?"

Matthias Clamer. Wireimage.com, PA News